The Adler Models 87 and 187 are very fine, German-manufactured, all-metal machines. I've owned several over the years and if in good mechanical shape, will last multiple lifetimes of users. I keep a 187 for my main construction machine. Avoid the Model 152/153 - these are also well-made, heavy duty machines - with one fatal flaw.

The 153 has needle position as well as length and width controls, with stitch limiter tabs near the position lever. The light switch is a toggle at the back and the nose opens, clam shell style, at the touch of a small lever above the back hinge. The motor is the original Adler made in USA and is 1.2 amps. As with most of these machines, the belt is disintegrating into a pile of orange chunks and string.
