Pascal is the first postmedieval apologist. He is "for today" because he speaks to modern pagans, not to medieval Christians. Most Christian apologetics today is still written from a medieval mindset in one sense: as if we still lived in a Christian culture, a Christian civilization, a society that reinforced the Gospel. No. The honeymoon is over.

The medieval synthesis is irreparably destroyed. Modern man has moved from place to space. It is Pascal's genius to see that. As such, the arguments are not so much arguments for God's existence et al, but arguments for faith within the Christian system. With Pascal apologetics takes on a keen psychological turn.
