Recently, the incidents of discrimination at the Ethical Culture School have, for the first time, widened to involve the Jewish student body. Jews have always been a majority of the student population. Several are, as I was, multigenerational legacies. But they have been mostly silent when it comes to Jewish matters on campus.

"The definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting a different result." I've heard several preachers use this quote in the last couple years to motivate people to worship differently, aka more fervently and wildly. Seems strange (perhaps even ironic) that they would say this.
