It all makes sense. Bomber crew graves have something about them and the "Elegy for a rear gunner" never sounded so true than on a cold day in some far away place when the mist is hanging and the aircrew graves are way out of place among a flurry of army headstones or set out on their own. I do find that sad. This is a lovely book.

Formal portrait of Werner Goering (top right) and his crew in front of the B-17 Fearless Fosdick The claim that Karl made, that he was Hermann Göring's brother, was by no means a whopper of a lie. Indeed it was quite believable, as Goering's wife was German too, and the whole family spoke German at home.
